the Congressman put on his dress suit early in the afternoon, with the great diamond cluster in his shirt front as hig as a postage stamp. And yet the little affair at his house, No. 14 Columbia street, was not a social event in the ordinary sense. There was no dancing, Mr. Campbell said, so it could not be called a social event. There was no champagne. It was not an occasion for display Just solid comfort. So there was just whiskey. There were four kinds of whiskey. There were four kinds of whiskey. There were four kinds of whiskey. The advented had sherry, and that bothered the gentlemen a good deal, because sherry looks like whiskey. To avoid confusion the sherry was secreted somewhere in the latter part of the afternoon.

There was a caterer who watched, and every time anybody sat down he swiftly put a naphin and two plates in that person's lap, one containing six kinds of cake and the other three kinds of loe-cream. There was no escaping the caterer. Four large cut-glass bottles nilso passed from time to time in company with a silver pitcher full of lee-water, and as the afternoon progressed the more emphalic grew the assertion tout the Ninth Congressional District was the smallent in area in the United States and possessed more population to the square foot, with more diversified industries, and therefore the Wilson bill should not he passed.

Judge Goldfogle and Sol Berliner were there, both of them bachelors and a little ashamed of it. Judge Goldfogle, however, brought forth works meet for repentance by presenting Miss Campbell with an enormous basket of roses and scarlet carnations. Mr. Herliner conducted a historical discussion with Mr. Roscoe as to whether or not Stettin, in Pomerania, ever belonged to Sweden, and Mr. Roscoe answered the argument by singing "Die Wacht am Rhein." Six boys hung on Mr. Campbell's back, yard fence and tossed a ball to Mr. Roscoe, who caimly put it in his pocket and wouldn't give it up until the boys cried: "Congressman!" The christening took place at 2.30 °. M. To tell the real plain truth of it the real christening took place when Miss Margaretta was not much more than a minute old. There was a chance of its dying and the doctor, who was a Catholic, baptized it, as a lay person may in a case of extremity. But Margaretta did not die, and, in order that all things might be done ceremonially, there was a formal christening yesterday. The sacrament is one which cannot be repeated, and so the formula was. "If thou be not already baptized, I bay tize thee." &c. The crying began when Father McGinley put the blessed sait on the tip of hor tiny, pink tongue. This was the first time she tasted salt, and she did not like it. When he touched her ears and nose, she howled. When he put his stole upon her to show that she was now under the screeched. She seemed to be about twenty-five years old, and was neatly dressed. The usher could not stop her. She got to the altar and deliberately laid her umbrella on the floor and her purse on the step. She kneeled and blessed herself as if in prayer. There she stayed, and the whole church, except the isishop, waited to see what would happen next.

It is not often that unexpected things happen at St. Thomas's. It is highly respectable there. The suspense was soon relieved. The usher who had been so cavalierly pushed aside got another man and the two walked up into the chancel and raised the young woman to her feet. She grabbed her umbrella and shook it at the Hishop, who was going on with his sermon. She wiggled and seemed to be saying something which could not be heard, but the two young men firmly and quickly led her out and to the front door. There she was sent away. The ushers did not inquire her name, and she was not arrested. The Bishop went on preaching.

William Morrison, a trained nurse, had been engaged to watch the patient. Apparently Meyers was resting nicely at 3 A. M., when Morrison went behind a portiere at the rear of the room. A few moments later he heard a sound at the window and ran up just in time to see Meyers throwing himself out.

The nurse, who is a big, powerful man, grabbed for Meyers's foot and caught it. His hold was slight, however, and the next moment the insane man fell headlong. Night Clerk Klaus and Engineer Boyd carried the body into the basement. Ambulance Surgeon Bainbridge, from the Presbyterian Hospital, found that Meyers's skull was fractured, his chest crushed and his left leg and arm broken. He was too badly injured to be moved, so the surgeon remained with him until 5.15 A. M., when he died. he hoped vast good would be accomplished and many souls harvested by the time he returned.

He referred to the celebration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of his pastorate by the city of Brooklyn and personages of national and international distinction.

"I am informed," he said, "that my sermons in the syndicate press go to 25,000,000 persons in many lands. I mention this, not in vain boast, but as a testimony to the fact that God answers prayer. Would to God I had better occupied the field and been more consecrated to the work. May God forgive me for lack of service in the past, and double and quadruple and quintuple my work in future."

Dr. Talmage recounted the fiery trials through which the Tabernacle had passed and spoke of the amount of money the church had raised during the present pastorate, which was $1,030,000.

"And now," he concluded, "having come up to the twenty-fifth milestone in my pastorate, I wonder how many more miles I am to travel? Your company has been exceedingly pleasant, o my dear people, and I would like to march by your side until the generation with whom we are now moving abreast, and step to step, shall have stacked arms after the last battle, ifut the Lord knows best, and we ought to be willing to stay or go."
